Guiteau More Quiet To-Day-Nine Jurors Secured Altogether-More Talesmen Ordered-The Appear-ance of the Assassin Greeted with

Guiteau's trial was resumed at 10 o'clock this morning. The wretch was brought up from jail in the usual way, and delivered at the City Hall without incident. When the doors for the admission of the general public were thrown open, the rush and scramble for seats was repeated. The five jurymen sciented yesterday, looking weary but resigned, were escorted into the court-room at 9:30 o'clock. Most of them were smoking eigars. The policemen to preserve order on cigars. A Rush for Seats in A Circus. A Rush for Seats in a Circus.

The space for members of the Bar and representatives of the Press was strictly reserved, and there was no unnecessary rush within the bar. Among the notable early comers was a diminutive weasened-faced little man, wearing a very large broadbrimmed plug hat and a lightish spring overcoat. At first glance he resembled Alex. Stephens. He sat within the bar, and conversed glibly with those around him, but to all he was a stranger. The assembled crowd, over four hundred, was admonished by Deputy Marshal Williams to preserve perfect quiet during the proceedings, and perfect quiet during the proceedings, and also informed that no one was to leave the room until recess, as the shuffling of feet and moving about disturbed the Court. The stenographers' brigade received an addition in the form of

It was three minutes after 10 o'clock when Judge Cox ascended to the bench. Mr. John Guiteau and Mrs. Scoville entered and took their seats at the same time. They were followed by Mr. Scoville and the Government attorneys, among whom was Mr. Smith, of the Department of Justice, who was assigned yesterday to assist in the prosecution. Col. Corkhill was a little late, but his man servant, "Black Sam," was there, holding his seat, Col. Corkhill and Mr. Leigh Robinson entered together. There was a short consultation between counsel, and then a wait of several minutes, during which Mr. John Scoville left the room. In the meantime

A Painful Stillness Prevailed. Every one anticipated the appearance of the assassin Guiteau, and all eyes were fastened on the door of the witness room, through which he was expected to enter. He was brought in at 10 minutes after 10 o'clock. He appeared more composed than yesterday, and less cadaverous. He took his seat quietly in front of the officers, and when his hands were unshackled shook hands with his sister, and when he got an opportunity conversed rapidly with his conveal.

Additional Witnesses Asked For. The proceedings were opened by Mr. scoville, who stated that he was forced to Scoville, who stated that he was forced to ask the Court for an order to allow the defense an additional number of witnesses. District Attorney Corkhill making no objection, the Court said he would issue the order to-day. Mr. Scoville filed an affidavit with his motion setting forth that, in addition to the forty witnesses already summoned, at least thirty-five more were needed. The clerk then proceeded to call the 100 talesmen ordered yesterday. Pending this, Guiteau sat quietly, with pen, ink and paper before him, now and then making a hasty memorandum.

The wretch conducted himself all through to-day's proceedings in a very becoming manner, and appeared to have mastered his excited feelings of yesterday and dislike for his counsel, Mr. Robinson. It was observed, though, that the latter took but little part in the drawing of jurors to-day, and spoke only after first consulting with Mr. Scoville. The Billiard Tournament in New York. The first games of the great billiard tournament for $2,560, the championship of the world and the diamond emblem donated by Richard Rocke, of St. Louis, were played at Tammany Hall, New York, last night, between William H. Sexton and Thomas Gallagher and Thomas Wallace and Jacob Schaefer. The largest audience ever assembled to witness a billiard contest was sembled to witness a billiard contest was at 100 to 40. The game was won by Galla-gher in fifty-eight innings. Score—Galla-cher, 200; Sexton, 160; average, Gallagher, 31 3-29; Sexton, 22 5-25; best runs, Gallagher, 29, 12, 11, 29, 13; Sexton, 10, 19, 11, 14. At 10 o'clock the second game was commenced, the contestants being Jacob Shaefer and Thomas Wallace. This former was the favorite at 100 to 25. The game was won believed in a hereafter and believed in capital punishment. [During the examination of this man, which was attended by several outbreaks of merriment, Guiteau laughed heartily at his quaint replies.] The juror was accepted and sworn.

Eugene R. Lewis, colored, had formed a prejudiced opinion. Excused.

John W. Pilling could not conscientiously become a juror. Excused.

Was the Wound Necessarily Mortal? It appears that the ball, after fracturing the eleventh and twelfth ribs, the former in two places, continued directly on in its course without marked deflect, and striking course without marked deflect, and striking the spine obliquely, passed through the inter-vertebral substance between the twelfth dorsal and first lumbar vertebrae, cutling a groove on the latter and lodging on the left side of the spine below the pancreas and outside the peritonetal cavity.

The spinal cord received no injury beyond a slight concussion, which was recovered from in a couple of days. No important vessel was injured and all the abdominal organs escaped. Now, where are the elements of inevitable death as the result of such a wand 7 the elements of inevitable death as the result of such a wound?

Dr. Hammond then quotes authorities that "although the ball may have traversed the body of the vertebræ in its anterior part, and although it may have caused paralysis," we should still trust to the infinite recourses of nature. Fractures of the vertebral column with compression of the spinal cord have recovered to an extent greater than would be supposed.

Surgeon-General Langmore of the British army says: "Balls have been known to pass through the base of the vertebræ and an apparent care followed."

Lidell states that out of ten cases of gunshot fractures of the vertebræ, without in-shot fractures of the vertebrae, without injury to the cord, four recovered.

Dr. Hammond quotes the following case, reported by Dr. Frank H. Hamilton, one of cases on record is that reported by Dr. F H. Hamilton.

A soldier was wounded March 16, IS65, the ball perforating or possibly grooving the anterior surface of the body of the second lumbar vertebra. In September, IS65, a small fragment of bone escaped. In September, IS67, Dr. Hamilton found him suffering only with a slight paralysis of the bladder.

The ball was found by bladder.

The ball was found lying in the muscles of the spine and Dr. Hamilton cut it out. Since then it is stated on the other side that recovery is complete. Dr. Hamilton took the man before the New York Pathological Society, and he says: The members present concurred with me in my opinion, that the ball had struck the body of the vertre-

bre.

Many other authorities to the like effect might be cited, but they are probably unnecessary. As to the injury to the ribs no civil or military surgeon will venture to affirm that gunshot fractures of the ribs, uncomplicated with lesions of the abdomen or there is viscors we precessarily fail.

It appears to me, therefore, and I think the great majority of civil and military surgeons agree with me, that while requires certain things to be done. In the first place the relative positions of the assailant and the patient should, if possible, be ascertained, and as thorough an examination of the wound should be made for the purpose of determining the course of the ball and its situation as the case requires.

requires.

There is no possible condition which can stand in opposition to this precept, though there may be such an existing state of the patient as to cause the examination to be deferred for a few hours. Such cases are, however, exceedingly rare.

There are foreign bodies—such as pieces of clothing, spiculæ of bone, etc.—which should be removed from the track of the wound as soon as discovered, and the bullet itself should be extracted if its removal can be effected without the infliction of serious additional injury.

Then Hammond quotes authorities on on these points, and proceeds:

fered for the first few hours after the indiction of the wound and the management of the fractured rib. I will only make one quotation, and that will be from the excellent work of Dr. Hamilton:

"It is seldom even in gaushot fractures that the intercostal artery bleeds sufficiently to require a ligature, but in case the hemorrhage from this source is alarming, and the artery cannot be tied in the usual way, or its bleeding be arrested by digital compression, it will be proper to cast a ligature around the entire rib on the side of the fracture nearest the spine, or even in some cases to exsect a portion of the rib in order to reach and secure the bleeding ves
